IS IT TIME? BY MERBERT FRY.

When a duty's to be done, Or a labor not begun, n our daily task we shun. When postponement is a crime; And, for temporary case, Waste the hours by slow degrees, and inquire, self-love to please,

One would think that if 'twere shown That an evil let alone Still has large and larger grown, Since its trivial birth and prime, Some one having power to cure Hearts diseased or minds impure, Would not ask, while these endure,

Why, when after strictest test, We've discovered what is best, Do we fold our hands at rest, In indifference sublime; Drifting, drifting with the years, Down a dark life-stream of tears, Ask, as wreck on wreck appears, Is it time ?

Is it time

Shall experience stop the way, Or divert and lead astray, The good purpose of to-day Shall the generous wish arise To be stifled in the sighs Of the man who vainly cries

What is good for thee to do, Find thou out, and that pursue, Keeping still thy purpose true,

As from height to height you climb. When a good deed's to be done, When the labor's not begun, When self's battle may be won, It is time.

"OUT OF THE SHADOW."

BY MISS N. M. M. CONAUGHY.

Cheerless was the attie which little Alice entered one dreary December day, after a long walk in the icy streets. There was no fire whatever in the broken grate, and the keen air whistled the half covered roof, sifting down the fine snow on the bare floor .-But though the place was so utterly cheerless, there was a smile as well as a tear in her brown eyes as she entered. In that low room was the only heart on earth that cared for her. A loving sister watched for watched with maternal tenderness. Day by day she had toiled for her support, unheeding the cruel exactions and often harsh words of her steel-hearted employer. Not unfrequently was she kept busy until far into the night, working costly fabries into cloaks and mantillas to glitter in for support. the fashionable promenade; thinking, sometimes, poorgirl, how a single vard of that costly trimming would bring plenty to her her to his side, saying, destitute home. Still she was usually contented with her frugal fare, for the white wings of purity and peace were folded on her bosom, and she blest God that actual want had never stared them in the face.

But at length a dark day came. The briskly to her place. her, became seated and she could no longer rise from her bed. A LESSON FOR LEAP YEAR.

A BALLAD BY JOHN JOLTER. Miss Betsey Bruce lived all alone, And had since I could tell, Her age was rising thirty-three, She had been once, a belle.

Her pride lay in her household now, A model in its way— No spot nor stain could there be found, No pin nor thread astray.

ere ser nons loud and clear, Which every halting, muddy shoe Seem'd tremblingly to hear. Two virgin pullets graced her yard,

The very stones before the door

Good layers, plump and fat.
Inside there shared her quiet hearth
A young and unwoo'd cat. Miss Betsey's form had somewhat lost, Within the last ten years, Its former roundness, and her face More angular appears.

There lived close by a bachelor, One Patrick Fitzbulgrade, A jovial son of Erin's isle, And " wayver to his trade."

He wore a green, broad-shouldered coat, Cravat and cheeks of rose, His trewser legs were slightly bow'd,
And aquiline his nose.

Now Betsey had of table-cloths At least a half a score. But she had vowed that, next leap year, She'd make as many more The time had come, and as he pass'd, She called the weaver in, To bargain for the job, and ask How many skeins to spin.

This happened on St. Patrick's day. The sun not quite gone down, The weaver in a merry mood Returning home from town. Bright fancies there had cheered his heart,

And whispered o'er and o'er.
That now his namesake, Erin's saint,
Had luck for him in store. "Och, misthress Betsey, is it me Ye'r wantin' this bright day? "The wayvin', darlint?—troth, I'd wave

For you my life away. Sheets, is it honey?—tablecloths,
My charmer, did ye say?
Yis—lape year?—faith, an' so it is?
Sure 'tis yerself makes tay.

Another cup-it's soon you said Mayourneen, soon say I—
Let's sale the bargain with a kiss—
Again!—we can but thry.

No license in the year }-why, sure, I'll get one av the Squire-lake no advances be me sowl, The sun went down, the moon rose high,

Ere Patrick bade good night,
Night sleepless made to Betsey Bruce
By vows she held in plight. Morn came-the sun look'd in and laugh'd-

The Capt of the Liberty being on shore, was returning to go on board, with his lady, in the evening, for which purpose he went down the Long Wharf. They were prevented from embarking by a large assembly of people, who were collected on the wharf. The people in a riotous manner demanded of the Captain that he should send on board for a man, who had fired on the people belonging to the Brig, when they attempted to come on shore in their boat. while the brig was in the custody of the Liberty. The Captain complied, and a man was brought on shore, but the people declared he was not the man, and another was sent for, when they again declared he was not the man demanded; another and another was sent for, under the same pretence, until the sloop was nearly unmanned. The populace then went on board the Liberty and cut her cables, when she drifted into a wharf a little north of the Long Wharf, and there grounded : they then cutaway her mast and threw overboard all her armament, stores and every thing useful or valuable. The wreck lay there a few days, when there came a high tide, which floated her, and she drifted over to Goat Island, near where the light keeper's house now is,

The first notice we find in the papers of that time is in the Newport Mercury of May 22d, 1769, viz. "Last Tuesday, a Sloop from the W. Indies, belonging to Providence in this Colony, was seized by the officers of the Liberty, sloop of War."

The next we find in the Providence Gazette, of May 27th, viz. "On Monday arrived here his Majesty's armed sloop Liberty, Capt. Reid, from Newport." The next is in the Providence Gazette of July 22d, 1769, viz. "The following is the last and most circumstantial account we have been able to procure, of the destruction of the armed sloop Liberty, at Newport, on Wednesday evening last.

"Capt. Reid, commander of the sloop Liberty, having seized a Brig and Sloop, belonging to Connecticut, on Monday, he carried them both into Newport. On Wednesday, the Capt. of the Brig went on board his vessel for some necessaries, but was informed that his linen and clothes were removed on board the Liberty; and observing some of her hands unbending his sails, he desired them to desist, but received the most abusive language in return : He then proposed going on shore, but missing his sword, civilly enquired for the same and was informed by one of the hands, that a man belonging to the Liberty sloop, lay on it, is the cabin; upon which the Capt. went down, but was accosted with a volley of oaths and imprecations: He then seized his sword, which the sloop's men endeavored to wrest from him, but did not succeed, and getting into the boat with a couple of his bands, was proceeding to the shore. The Liberty Sloop was immediately hailed, and informed of the affair, when a musket with a brace of balls was fired at the boat, which nearly proved fatal to the Captain as both balls flew close to him; a swivel was then leveled, which only flashed and a pistol likewise snapped at the boat without effect. Numbers of people on the wharf were witnesses to this extraordinary procedure, and Captain Reid, being on shore, was compelled in the evening to order all his men from on board the Liberty. IAISH WIT .- Some two or three days since a to answer for their conduct : Her cables dandified chap entered the post office, and in a 'pon'onor' style enquired if there were any 'let-tawa' for him, and on being told that the mail wharf, where a number of men chiefly from She awoke late but with a light heart, grants and purchases, granted by or made within from New York had not arrived, but would in a Connecticut, went on board, and after cutthis State, to all intents and purposes as if such terthis State, to all intents and continuing within this State. thing very particular to do, he would sit down.
